

World Bank eLibrary Frequently Asked Questions

What is eLibrary?

The World Bank eLibrary is the World Bank's online collection of 6,000+ books, reports, journals, and working papers including:

- 500+ Development Outreach, World Bank Economic Review and World Bank Research Observer journal articles published since 1996
- 3,800+ Development Economics (DEC) policy research working papers published since 1995
- 2,300+ e-books and reports dating as far as the 1970's in some cases, plus all new formal publications upon release

All content can be viewed online and downloaded free of DRM (with the exception of a watermark). eLibrary is available to institutions by subscription and access is via IP authentication.

Why should I use eLibrary?

Among the major differences between accessing content in eLibrary vs. the Bank's main web site is that eLibrary is focused on the needs of the library, research, and academic communities. For example, eLibrary allows users to save, email, export, modify, search within, and share search results. Search history is accessible during each user session and options for exporting to citation tools such as Endnote and BibTex are included. Publications and searches may be saved in individual user accounts for long-term research projects.

The quality and convenience of the eLibrary's highly efficient search engine save researchers valuable time. Each article, book, and working paper is enriched with semantic and bibliographic metadata, including topics, regions, countries, abstracts and key words using a controlled vocabulary allowing for easier discovery. Quick Search searches all metadata in order to return highly relevant results across all content types in a hurry. Advanced Search makes it possible to include or exclude full text, specified search terms, and the metadata classifications.

The World Bank eLibrary contains only the final published versions of the Bank's formal publications.

Why should I sign up for an Individual User account?

An Individual User account allows you to take advantage of several eLibrary benefits. Registration is free, quick, and easy and allows you to:

- Save and organize searches
- Export Search Results (with options for Endnotes and BibTex)
- email and share your Search History
- Bookmark Favorites
- Sign up for new content alert emails and RSS feeds based on your preferences
- Purchase individual titles (if you are not subscribed)

What other features does eLibrary have?

In addition to the items above, eLibrary offers:

- Downloadable metadata and MARC 21 for easier indexing and cataloging
- Reference linking to external sources
- Digital Object Identifiers (DOIs)
- COUNTER-compliant usage statistics for institutional subscribers and SUSHI reports for consortia coordinators
- Athens and Shibboleth authentication
- Institutional branding on the eLibrary home page
- One-click social media icons for sharing pages and abstracts
