COMPUTING NEWS

Java Founder Gosling Quits Google For Robot Maker

Java creator James Gosling has left search engine giant Google to become chief software architect at Liquid Robotics, a cloud-based data service provider and maker of unmanned ocean vehicles.

In a message to eWEEK, Gosling said leaving Google was a difficult decision, but the opportunity to work with a former Sun Microsystems colleague on some new and interesting projects was just too much to turn down.

Moreover, joining Liquid Robotics means Gosling will not have to remain so close to the ongoing legal battle between Google and Oracle over the use of Java in the Android operating system.

Samsung Backs VMware Mobile Play

Samsung has revealed it will make phones that can run VMware's mobile hypervisor technology

VMware's efforts to move its virtualization technology onto mobile handsets received a welcome boost after it was revealed that Samsung would now use the technology.

VMware chief Paul Maritz used his keynote speech at the opening of VMworld 2011 to outline the so-called "post PC world", and revealed that VMware was working on providing software for "virtual phones".

Don't buy your iPad in a McDonald's car park

A young woman in South Carolina has had her dream of buying a brand-new shiny iPad in the car park of a McDonald's crushed by two swindlers, who left her with a wooden dud.

The 22-year-old saw nothing suspicious in being approached by two men in the aforementioned car park nor in being offered an iPad for $300.

Claiming they had bought iPads in bulk, the fraudsters enticed the naive Apple fan by showing her an actual iPad and agreed to take $180 for it, which was all she said she had, according to a Spartanburg County Sheriff's report.

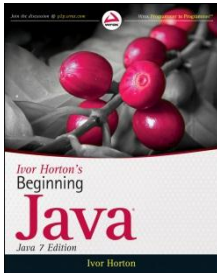

She was handed one of several FedEx boxes from the boot of their car and, presumably happy and satisfied with her lovely new purchase, she drove home without looking inside.

Imagine her chagrin when she opened the box at home only to discover "a piece of wood painted black with an Apple logo", as the report described it.
